PREFACE

This First Edition of " Thom's Irish Who's Who " contains life sketches of upwards of 2,500 Irish men and women, at home and overseas, who are conspicuous in the Nation's History, and includes leaders of thought and action in all fields of enlightenment and civilization.

Neither labour nor expense has been spared in an effort to make the book as authoritative as possible, but no claim is made to completeness. The difficulties that confront the Editor of a volume of this description are much greater than may appear to a casual observer. In the first place there is always present the desire to avoid invidious selection, and in the second, the danger of omitting, through oversight, names whose absence might naturally occasion surprise.

This applies especially, and for obvious reasons, to a First Edition, and therefore we issue this publication with an apology for errors which are unavoidable, and of whose existence we are unaware. We cordially invite the co-operation of the Irish Public everywhere, in enabling us in subsequent editions to correct such errors of omission or commission as we may have unwittingly made. Our aim is to make this Directory complete, and to enable the wayfarer or the scientific inquirer to discover immediately and without inconvenience " Who's Who " in the homeland and abroad. When it is borne in mind that the sun never sets on Ireland's sons and daughters, it will be apparent that such co-operation as we invite is vitally important.

We respectfully present this Volume as a chapter in the contemporary history of the Irish Nation. Most books of reference become obsolete by flux of time. This volume will become enhanced in value as the years pass. Ireland is emerging from the throes of revolution, the ultimate effects of which none can appreciate or forecast. When the historian of the future undertakes to chronicle the stirring events of which the passing generation is witness, we venture to suggest that the names and history of the outstanding personalities of 1922 will be of priceless value. What, for example, would the historian of to-day not give for an "Irish Who's Who" relating to the year that marked the passing of the Act of Union?

Our immediate appeal is to the Statesman, the Man of Letters, the Clergyman, the Artist, the Journalist, the Lawyer, the Scientist, and last, but in many respects first, the Man of Commerce. To these and to the general public we hope the book will prove useful.

An Enormous Sum leaves Ireland Annually in Insurance Premiums

ARE YOU AWARE—

- That there is an Irish Company in existence ?
- That it transacts practically all classes of insurance ?
- That its funds are solely invested in Ireland ?
- That its available resources will be invested in Irish enterprises only ?
- That it is helping to keep Ireland economically sound ?
- That it has a business proposition to put before you, apart from sentimental grounds ?
- That it is established on a sound financial basis ?
- That its policy holders are fully secured ?
- That its staff is the cream of the Irish-Ireland movement ?
- That you should pass the word on and recommend us to your friends ?
- That there is no reason to send your business beyond your own shores ?
- That of the £5,000,000 Insurance Premiums sent outside, little, if any, is returned to Ireland for investment in Irish enterprises ?

WALSH, James, J., First Postmaster-General, Irish Free State, and Director of Aonach Tailteann under an Dail, is one of the many Cork men who came into prominence in the fight for freedom, and one of the West Cork men or sons of Carberry who now holds a Portfolio in the Provisional Government, Mr. Collins, late Chairman, and Mr. Diarmuid O'Hegarty, Secretary, being the others of the trio. Mr. Walsh, whose father and grandfather also got some prominence in past Irish movements, entered the Post Office Service in Cork in 1897. A few years later at the age of 19 he was co-opted on the Cork International Exhibition Executive. At the age of 22 he organised the first League System in Gaelic Games, and was largely responsible for the introduction of the native pastimes into the Colleges of Ireland. In 1906 he was elected President of the Cork County Board, the biggest and most progressive Board governing Irish games—a position which he held until his deportation after the outbreak of war in 1914. Many of the reforms which brought the Gaelic Athletic Association to its present height were due to his unabating advocacy. In 1908 he was elected a member of the City Council, being then the youngest Councillor in the country. He is now an Alderman for the same Ward in his native city. In 1912 he first entered on a political or political-military career by introducing a rifle club into Cork —this being the first time for centuries in which Nationalists dared to take weapons openly. Like those who supported him at the time, he was an advocate of Sinn Fein as preached by Mr. Arthur Griffith. In 1913, when the Irish Volunteers were formed in Dublin, he organised his native County in the Volunteer interests, and presided at the big meeting in the City Hall that year when Roger Casement spoke—a meeting at which he (Mr. Walsh) got his head smashed—practically all present being opposed to the proposal. He remained, until deported in 1914, the head of the Volunteers, at one time over 20,000 strong, who fired the first shot in the long-fought campaign, which only ended six months ago. He returned six months later, was courtmartialled and confined under strong supervision to Dublin. In Easter Week he fought in the Post Office under James Connolly, and was made Postmaster-General under the Republic. On the surrender he was sentenced to death and penal servitude. Immediately after his release in 1917, he was again arrested, sentenced to two years' hard labour, during which time he went through the Ashe hunger strikes and ordeals of forcible feeding. In 1918 he was again arrested and sentenced to a further two years' imprisonment. In 1919 he was arrested for the fourth time and sentenced to five years' penal servitude—this being the only case on record in political fights where one man underwent two periods of convict punishment. However, the day after his trial, and before the promulgation of sentence, he escaped over the wall at Mountjoy with twenty others. He was then "on the run" until the end of 1921, when he was recaptured and sent to Parkhurst Convict Settlement where he led a revolt. Being transferred to Shrewsbury Prison, he refused to wear convict clothes or to obey convict regulations, with the result that for six months, and until his release, he suffered the tortures of solitary confinement without wearing apparel of any kind. He was elected Senior Deputy for Cork City in 1918, getting the highest vote in Ireland.
